Riding the roller-coaster

The oil price continues to be weak on the back of the US crude inventories reaching to record levels which have just strengthened the view of some of a global oversupply.

Gold prices continue to be lacklustre while investors feel a little more certainty about Greece and it's Eurozone creditors, meaning there is not the need to park savings in a safe haven in most investors minds.

Cooper futures have had a slight rally of approximately 2% recently, in fact now that the Chinese New Lunar Year is out of the way we should see other base metals regain some of their lost momentum with, aluminium, zinc, nickel, tin and even lead all expected to have modest increases. Although current reported Company earnings are again casting a long shadow over the market.

Even though the numbers are not healthy regarding iron ore exports, BHP Billiton, Rio Tinto and Fortescue Metals have shown healthy gains in their share prices during February.

So can we expect March to be a turn around month? I'd suggest that the end of March is a more likely turning point but the general feeling is 2015 is going to be just as hard as 2014, with opportunities being scarce.

So research the market, know your target companies and most of all read as
