What do you get.

The book is a mix of boardroom practice, resource sector management and investment observations and discussion, written in Trench's trademark dry humorous style.

All these ingredients blended together provide for an insightful analysis and greater understanding of Australia's mining sector.

It takes unique skills to lead a resources company.

When you understand what goes on in the boardroom, you better understand the company you are working for or investing in.

DR ALLAN TRENCH has been exposed to the inner workings of Australian mining and exploration companies for three decades –including ten years' experience as a director.

Over the years he has penned some insightful articles about boardroom practice, management issues and common strategic dilemmas that companies' have faced in the sector and how they were resolved – as well as about broader issues covering mineral commodity markets and pertaining to topical resources sector issues that directors, managers and investors need to both contemplate and understand.

For the first time he brings this knowledge and experience together in one entertaining and informative book, DR ALLAN TRENCH is non-executive director of a number of emerging resources. He holds a doctorate in geophysics, a Masters degree in mineral economics and an MBA (Oxon). Allan is a Professor of Mineral & Energy Economics at the Graduate School of Business, Curtin University of Technology – and Research Professor (Value & Risk) at the Centre for Exploration Targeting, University of Western Australia. He is also an Associate Consultant with CRU Group, a global independent metals & mining advisory consultancy.
